U. S. PAPER MILL

High Bids to Supply Government Add Further Impetus to Movement.

INCREASE OF $1,000,000

The proposal for the establishmen of a government-owned and operated paper mill, to produce paper for its own use, has been given further impetus by the high bids for paper for the government which have been received by joint committee on printing of Congress, it was said at the Capitol

The bids, which were opened Saturday, if accepted would force the government to pay just about $1,000,000 nore for its paper during the next year han it has paid during the last year. It has been estimated that it would cost the government about $1,000,000 to establish a paper mill of its own. Therefore, should the government deno more than the increase in the paper bill over last year, provided the paper should be purchased from private

May Seek New Bids. The joint committee on printing will eet Saturday to consider these paper oids and to make awards, provided it is decided to make awards. It was learned today, however, that the committee may decide to call for new bids, both because it considers the prices too high in those bids already submitted, and because very few bids were received. There was only one bid, it was pointed out, for upward of a million dollars worth of paper. Last year half dollars worth of paper. Last year half a dozen bids were received, where today only one has been received. A bill providing for the establishment of a government paper mill has been favorably reported to the House from the House committee on printing. The Senate committee on printing has not yet given much attention to this matter, but it is expected that it will do so, in view of the high prices now being demanded for paper, and the comparatively small number of bidders.

The government's paper bill last year was $1,371,000. The bids put in to sup-

The government's paper bill last year was $1,371,000. The bids put in to sup-ply the government with paper this year would increase this figure to $2,-$50,000. The increase rests largely on items for print and book papers.
